[translated] REMINISCENCE - “Prologue”

The short introduction before Hope’s interview, fully translated for your enjoyment. So enjoy! :D

REMINISCENCE -tracer of memories- “Prologue”

Because I am a journalist, I have the opportunity to hear the stories of many people every day. I disregard age or gender. My interviews can range from powerful figures of national authority to young children that happen to stumble by. The endless variety of stories that I hear are fascinating to me. My work as a journalist can also be considered a hobby of mine. And if you wonder whether I am a successful journalist, I suppose you can say that I am.

But apart from my work, there is a “mystery” that I am chasing. It’s a phenomenon that can’t exactly be explained using common knowledge. At first, I simply thought it was my imagination, but I just couldn’t let it go and my curiosity thickened. When I began to research the strange cases, I discovered a good amount of incomprehensible coincidences. I became absorbed in searching for the answer to this mystery. I had to know for myself. In order to fulfill my desire, it was essential for me to hear the stories of as many people as I could possibly interview.

Because of this, for every interview I conduct, I always ask the same questions. And they are odd questions. Most people are dumbfounded by them and hardly take them seriously. But there are also many people who earnestly provide me with the answers I seek. And as I gather more witnesses, the “mystery” only grows deeper.

Tonight, I am making my way to another interview – a reputable interview with an individual who is well informed in social conditions and political economics. After we firmly discuss our occupations, I will incorporate my “usual questions” into some small talk. I wonder if he will answer them... No, I was inwardly convinced that he would definitely answer them.

He is currently an unaffiliated researcher. Although this young scholar is not world-renown, he is beginning to receive a considerable amount of attention within the academic world for his extensive knowledge, particularly in the areas of humanity and society.

His name is Hope Estheim...
